Abstract: Landing a permanent academic job is not an easy task. With the increase in the number of PhDs graduating globally, we must compete with hundreds of applicants contesting for a single position. Along with your prospectus or dissertation stress, preparing the documents, searching, and applying for jobs, and then getting ready for interviews are hectic. Even if you wish to move outside academia, you will need to start your preparations early. Mine was also a rough and rugged journey and I'm happy to share what I did, my experience, and how I succeeded. This talk will share tips to help you during the academic job search process to feel more confident in your job search.
